Inventive step (IS)	Claims	11-14, 16, 18-20	YES

The subject matter of claims 1-20 is novel over the prior art (PCT Article 33(2)) in light of the documents cited in the international search report. The problem addressed by the present invention appears to be that of providing an alternative process for producing micropellets. However, in light of the prior art the proposed process does not appear to involve an inventive step, since, compared to other granulation methods, spray granulation is a well-known process for preparing compositions of sparingly soluble active substances. Preparation of substances for granulation in the form of solid dispersions of micronized particles is likewise well known. The quantitative ratios shown also fall within the normal ranges for functional adjuvants and active substance. The list of solutizers in claim 4 is not limiting, since it is preceded by the expression "more particularly". The preferred macrolide antibiotics of the present application are explicitly mentioned among sparingly soluble active substances of the prior art (see EP1027887 (D1) paragraphs 18, 20, 23, 43, 45 and 73; WO02/089773 (D2) pages 16-17 and examples C and D). pharmaceutical presentations thereby obtainable claimed in claims 15 and 17 do not appear to involve an inventive step (PCT Article 33(3)) in light of D1 and D2.

The process claimed in claims 11-14 and the products claimed in claims 18-20 involve an inventive step, since the processes so restricted and the products thereby produced are not suggested by the prior art.

Expressions placed between parentheses in a claim can lead to lack of clarity, since it is not possible to discern whether said expressions have a restrictive effect on the subject matter of the claim in respect of novelty (claims 8, 15 and 16; PCT Article 6).
